“ Because of our age difference, Allegra was more like a favorite Aunt to me, than a sister. She married Stan 23 days after I was born. Guess she had had enough babysitting because Ron (our brother) was born when she was 15. But Allegra was always there ..and seemed to always be the place that was safe and caring. When our father died (i was 5 and Ron was almost 8)...I remember very clearly Allegra and Stan making sure we had a Christmas that year.....there were other gifts, but I remember a bright green hula hoop. Stan would come over every year on Christmas Eve to set up trains and the tree at our house....for many years. Stan always took up the slack...and Allegra always made sure of it. When there was a need that needed attention....Allegra was there. I remember having lots of nights at her house, when I was an age I didn't want to be hime. I'd babysit while she and Stan bowled and catch the bus to school from her house. And I babysat summers...which meant swimming in her pool...and not having to be at home. Allegra and Stan were the “family” we introduced our friends to.....I'll miss her presence in my life.

“ In my youth I did not have a close relationship with my Aunt Allegra, as my family moved from Maryland to Florida when I was a child. And although we kept in touch, we only saw family relations sporadically throughout the years. However, in the later part of the last decade myself and my mother (Allegra's sister, Virginia) were able to make annual visits with her in St. Augustine, and catch up on some of the lost time. Twenty-twenty has certainly been a tragic year in many ways for many people, and for different reasons. I lost two of my “aunties” a little more than a month apart. My father's sister, who was friends with Aunt Allegra and Uncle Stanley as young adults in Annapolis, passed away on October 28th. While recently communicating with one of my paternal cousins, she said, “Well, they're all together now, eating crabs and drinking beer”. I like that mental image:)

“ Too many memories to share here although it began with Allegra being my first babysitter. Although I have no memory of that I do have one that i'd like to share with you. I'm forever grateful for Allegra and Stan taking me in after my mother died. I was 18 and had planned to go to college but really had no idea how that was going to happen. That's when Allegra went to work! The spring semester was two weeks away but that was not going to stop her..in that time I got accepted to Maryland, she acquired a State Senatorial scholarship, room & board/work study through the university and a federal grant for all four years. She changed my life in a few shorts weeks and i could never repay her for all that she did for me. All my love, Clark
